Counsel Seeks To Prove Sabbath Closing Law Enforced Only Against Small Merchants

A major test of the constitutionality of New York's Sunday-closing law began in Brooklyn Criminal Court with testimony by spokesmen for the city's major newspapers, radio-TV stations, department stores, sight-seeing tours, and movie theatres. The Sunday law challenge was made by the American Jewish Congress, which is providing legal counsel for Charles Pam, an Orthodox Jewish grocer of Brooklyn, charged with selling a can of tuna and a jar of baby food during prohibited hours on Sunday.

Marvin M. Karpatkin, an officer of the American Jewish Congress Metropolitan Council who is representing Mr. Pam, said he would seek to prove that the New York State Sabbath law has been enforced only against small merchants like Mr. Pam but not against large firms like the New York Times, the National Broadcasting Company, R. H. Macy, and other enterprises that he said are in clear and direct violation of the law.

"On the basis of testimony adducing discriminatory enforcement of the law," Mr. Karpatkin said, "we will seek to have the criminal information against Mr. Pam dismissed and the prosecution quashed as violations of the Federal and State Constitutions."

In a statement, Mr. Karpatkin declared: In representing Mr. Pam in behalf of the American Jewish Congress, we will seek to show: 1) That the New York Sabbath law is an unnecessary infringement upon the Constitutional rights of persons who observe a day other than Sunday as their day of rest. 2) That the law imposes an economic hardship on persons like Mr. Pam who, in good faith, close their places of business for religious reasons on a day other than Sunday; and 3) That the Police Department, by cracking down against a grocery store operator like Mr. Pam, while ignoring other and far more serious violators of the statute, is guilty of discriminatory enforcement of the law, thus causing a denial of equal protection as guaranteed under the Fourteenth Amendment.

"If the law is to be enforced," the American Jewish Congress spokesman declared, "it should be enforced against all who violate the statute, among them: Every radio and TV station that broadcasts on Sunday;

Every newspaper whose editorial and mechanical staffs work on Sunday; Every drug store that sells cosmetics, toys, and similar items on Sunday; Every service station that sells anything besides gasoline, oil, and tires on Sunday; Every newsstand that sells books on Sunday; Every sightseeing bus or boat that operates on Sunday;

Every church, or other operator, of Sunday bingo games, and every other public or private facility that, wittingly or not, violates the New York Sabbath laws. If the law is unenforceable equally, it should be amended or abolished."

The Pam case is unique in that it marks the first major test of a new legal doctrine enunciated in February, 1962, by the Appellate Division in the Fourth Department. In the case of People of the State of New York vs. Utica Daw's Drug Company, Inc., the court held that a showing of discriminatory enforcement of the New York Sunday law is a valid basis for attacking the constitutionality of the statute.

It is under this opinion, Mr. Karpatkin said, that he will seek to submit evidence of discriminatory enforcement of the Sunday law. Such evidence was ruled inadmissible in the last major Sunday law test case in New York, the Friedman case of 1952.

A total of thirty-three companies were subpoenaed to appear in Brooklyn Criminal Court. Each of them, according to the American Jewish Congress spokesman, is in violation of the New York Sunday law. They include:

New York Times, New York Herald Tribune, New York Mirror, New York News; ABC-Paramount; Columbia Broadcasting System; Abraham & Straus; Gimbel Brothers; R. H. Macy & Co.; Stern Brothers Co.; motion picture theatres; furniture and other stores; sightseeing services; and others.

The case of Mr. Pam, an Orthodox Jewish grocer who has a store at 1000 Hopkinson Avenue, Brooklyn, began on Sunday, July 22, at approximately 10 A.M., when he was served a summons for selling a can of tuna and a jar of baby food to a customer. This was in violation of Section 2147 of the New York penal law, which limits the Sunday sale of "cooked and prepared foods" such as canned goods to the hours between 4 P.M. and 7 P.M.

Mr. Pam refused to pay a $5 fine and asked that the constitutionality of the law be tested. His case was taken by the American Jewish Congress, which is providing legal counsel free of charge to Mr. Pam. Serving as attorney in the case is Marvin M. Karpatkin, of 660 Madison Avenue, New York, co-chairman of the committee on law and social action of the American Jewish Congress New York Metropolitan Council.

Mr. Pam is 47 years old and closes his grocery every Friday evening until Sunday morning, in observance of the Jewish Sabbath. Far from being a Sabbath violator, Mr. Pam considers himself a strict Sabbath observer. He holds that the law cannot establish a day for religious observance.

Rabbi Says Christianity Is Religion About Judaistic Jesus

The religion of Jesus of Nazareth and Judaism were one and the same, the Rev. Dr. Maurice J. Bloom declared in New York, at Tremont Temple, 2004 Grand Concourse, the Bronx. The Reform rabbi said: "Christianity is not the religion of Jesus (that is Judaism); Christianity is the religion about Jesus", says the New York Times. The basic Biblical difference between Christianity and Judaism, he explained, is Christianity's belief that the Messiah has already appeared in the person of Jesus, and Judaism's hope that the Messiah is still to come. He continued:

"Both beliefs, of course, have developed and evolved in the last 2,000 years, so that, for example, there are now many Christians who do not believe in every aspect of Jesus' messiahship, while there are many Jews, Reform Jews especially, who no longer long for a personal Messiah, but rather hope for a Messianic Age.

"Christians are so called not because they are the followers of Jesus, but because they hold him to be the Messiah (Christos, in Greek), promised in Holy Writ, while Jews deny this claim completely in all its various manifestations."

Jesus, Dr. Bloom observed, was a Jew raised in accordance with Judaic law, and Judaism was "the basis of his beliefs and teachings." The designation of Jesus as the Messiah, the rabbi said, was made by the writers of the New Testament, who misinterpreted the Old Testament as forecasting this event.

One of the messianic proofs offered by Christians today, he went on, is "the claim of the virgin birth of Jesus." In part, he said, the idea of the virgin birth may have stemmed from a mis-translation from Isaiah of the Hebrew word "almah," which does not mean "virgin" in the modern sense, but "young woman."

"The fact is that very early Christianity knew nothing about the virgin-birth origin of Jesus," he added. "The concept of a divine origin for a god or a hero came from Greek and pagan origins, and was probably helpful toward the conversion of Greeks and pagans to the new faith.

"The virgin-birth story must have passed into the Gospels from the first Gentile Christians who brought it in from the pagan myth of 'a divine mother.'

"To the Jewish Christians of the earliest years the whole idea would have been alien. Maternity, and not virginity, was praiseworthy in Judaism, and the thought of God incarnate in a human being would have been incredible," says the New York Times. The best proof that the Messiah has not yet arrived, the rabbi said, is that the conditions of a Messianic Age — of "peace on earth, goodwill to all men" — have not yet been fulfilled.

Ford $6 Million Grant Goes To Brandeis For Higher Goals

The Ford Foundation has announced a $6 million grant to Brandeis University to support its over-all academic development. The Foundation, which at the same time announced a $6.5 million grant to the University of Southern California, called for the funds to be matched on a three-to-one basis during the next three years. Brandeis accordingly, must raise $18 million by 1966 to earn the grant. The unrestricted grants were made under the Foundation's Special Program in Education, created in 1960 to advance the development of selected private universities and colleges as centers of higher educational excellence.

Institutions are selected, according to James W. Armsey, the Program's director, on the basis of their tradition of scholarship, their plans and ability to make pace-setting improvements, the quality of their leadership, strength of support from alumni and other sources, and geographical location. The Foundation has now granted a total of $127.2 million under the Special Program to eight universities and 29 colleges.

Brandeis, cited by the Foundation for its distinguished academic record, will receive an immediate payment of $2 million which it plans to use to recruit new faculty, to make library acquisitions, and to expand fellowship, research, and academic programs.

Under a ten-year program newly drawn up by Brandeis, the Foundation grant with its matching funds would be used solely for academic purposes. The program features, among other possible developments, the creation of new areas of graduate study, as well as new forms and processes of graduate education; establishment of additional professional schools and specialized institutes and centers; increased enrollment of gifted students and a higher level of financial assistance to the best-qualified students; development of a summer program at the college level for gifted high school students; and the creation of a national scholarship competition for graduates of two-year colleges.

Under its tentative plan, the University would also create a faculty incentive program which would make possible greater stipends for outstanding teachers. In addition, the University plans to establish an underwritten program for research in the social sciences, humanities, and creative arts to balance its scientific research program, currently supported by almost $5 million in grants. The Foundation said that both Brandeis University and the University of Southern California have made notable progress in recent years, and significant new achievements can be expected of them.

"In the 14 years since it was founded," the announcement went on, "Brandeis has made a distinguished academic record, both in its undergraduate college and in its developing graduate programs. As the first non-sectarian institution of American higher education sponsored by the American Jewish community, it follows along American tradition of denominationally sponsored colleges that have provided outstanding higher education for the community at large."

The president of Brandeis, Dr. Abram L. Sachar, described the grant as a turning point in the history of Brandeis University. "It does for economic stability what Phi Beta Kappa accreditation did for academic stature," he said, alluding to the national liberal arts honor society which last year authorized Brandeis to form a chapter. "A young institution, having to telescope decades into years, inevitably must divert precious energies as it struggles with the problem of sheer survival," Dr. Sachar said. "The Ford grant, with its matching incentives, lifts a huge burden of anxiety and releases the University's dynamism and resourcefulness for the adventures in education of the next exciting decade."

Norman S. Rabb, chairman of the Brandeis board of trustees, said: "The most significant aspect of this grant is the challenge it offers us. We accept the challenge and we will not fail. That challenge has been a daily companion during the University's 14-year history. Brandeis was founded just 14 years ago this fall with 109 students, a castle, 16 faculty members, a handful of founding trustees, and $37,215.10 in the bank."

Expert Formulated Laws That Govern Biblical Chanting

Prof. Salomo Rosowsky, an authority on the musical notation system for reading the Bible in Hebrew, who died in his home, 600 West 136th Street, in New York, at the age of eighty-five years, was on the faculty of the Jewish Theological Seminary. He came to the U.S. twelve years ago. In 1957 he published the first volume of his major work, "The Cantillation of the Bible," covering the Pentateuch, the first five books of the Old Testament. He had been working on a second volume since then.

The late Olin Downes, music critic of The New York Times, wrote of Professor Rosowsky in 1932:

"The first results of his investigations are most important for students of Jewish religious music and for musicians and composers of the Jewish race. But his studies have an even wider application.

"They bear significantly upon the origins of psalmody of the early Christian church, the sources of the Gregorian chant and the later developments of notation systems in the Middle Ages, from which our present system of musical notation has evolved.

"There is, in fact, enough gunpowder in Professor Rosowsky's work to cause extensive revision of the whole theory of the development of the music of the Christian church."

Salomo Rosowsky was born in [illegible], Latvia, the son of one of the foremost cantors of his generation. He at first intended to become a lawyer, but the musical influence in the home prevailed although he graduated from the [illegible] University Law School and [illegible] a while, says the New [illegible] soon entered the [illegible] then a teacher.

Dr. Rosowsky organized, in 1909, a Society of Jewish Music. Three years later he was music critic of The Day, and in 1918 he became musical director of the Jewish Theatre of Dramatic Art. He composed much music for the Habimah Theatre. Professor Rosowsky headed the Jewish Conservatory of Music in Riga for five years after he had founded it. In 1925 he left Europe for Palestine.

His most important early work was achieved under the auspices of the Palestine Institute for Musical Sciences, where Dr. Rosowsky immersed himself in teaching, composition, and musical research.

"Very remarkable is Dr. Rosowsky's method of analyzing the vast ocean of signs, melodic fragments, separating pausal accents and connecting tropes, which form the traditional cantillation of the Bible," wrote Lazare Saminsky, then music director of Temple Emanu-El, in New York, a number of years ago.

"His method is that of biological research. As a key in establishing the exact rhythmic tonal lines of the basic Biblical chants, Dr. Rosowsky selected the musical cell that forms the cadence in each fragment, then follows development of the nucleus, the monosyllable, the words, and melodic lines.

"Dr. Rosowsky arrived at a formulation of the laws that govern the chanting of the Bible," Mr. Saminsky wrote, says the New York Times. Surviving Dr. Rosowsky is his widow, Mrs. Rachel Rosowsky.

U. S. Technical Aid To Israel Ranges From Home Economics To River Diversion, Made Magic There

A beneficiary of the United States Operations Mission, Israel became a benefactor when Israel developed her own program to help younger and lesser developed countries in Asia and Africa.

"We used to say that our task was to work ourselves out of jobs," recalled Bruce McDaniel, of Redlands, Calif., the first director of the Mission in Israel. "As far as I know, this is the first case where technical assistance and economic aid have phased themselves out."

Mr. McDaniel, a retired lawyer, banker, and planter, and his wife were guests of the Israeli Government. He appeared in the documentary film showing how United States technical and economic assistance has led to international cooperation, produced by the Israel Government, says the New York Times. About 380 experts served on the program in Israel and 650 Israelis took advanced study in the United States.

Mr. McDaniel said the program was a great success in Israel because the Government honestly desired to use technical assistance to benefit all the people, not just special groups. Moreover, he said, the people worked in advance and were notified regularly of the accomplishments.

"These ingredients," he observed, "make up the formula for a successful aid program that should be the model for Asia, Africa, and Latin America."

Mr. McDaniel, who completed his assignment in Israel in 1954, said the most striking change he found on his return there was the abundance of food. He also noted that people were better dressed, that telephone, bus, and railway facilities were much improved and that hotel services were more efficient. He attributed the improvements to Mission projects.

"When we came in 1951," he recalled, "it was months before we saw an egg. The ration was one a week for pregnant women and children only. Now Israel exports eggs."

The basic limiting factor at the time Mr. McDaniel assumed his post was a shortage of feed grain for poultry. The Mission provided United States agricultural surpluses. Later, experts were brought over to help develop a poultry-breeding program. Today surpluses of poultry and eggs rather than shortages are Israel's problem.

Beef, which is no longer rationed, was almost unattainable a decade ago. United States cattle men have helped to plan range-land management and supervised the crossing of Brahman bulls with local breeds to produce faster-maturing and fatter steers that are more resistant to local diseases and heat.

"Our milkman used to call at our house in Herzliya with churns covered with straw so that the flies wouldn't get at the milk," the former Mission director said. "He used to lay the straw on the cart while he ladled a measure from the can into a vessel."

Milk sanitation was one of the Mission's first projects in Israel.

MARRIAGES

KATZ-STARR

Denburg, Rabbi, assisted by Cantor Arieh L. Suber. The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her gown was of white peau de sole and Guipure lace, fashioned with a high neckline; long sleeves; and bell-shaped skirt, edged in seed-pearl-beads, terminating as a train. Her long, bouffant veil of tulle illusion was placed by an entirely beaded, pill-box, hat; and she carried a prayer book with white orchids, and stephanotis. Miss Roslyn Smiley, cousin of the bride, was maid of honour, wearing a long, pink, satin gown styled with a bell-shaped skirt; high neckline; and beaded bolero jacket. Her miniature pill-box hat was covered with tiny petals; and she carried a cascade of white Sweetheart roses. Howard J. Katz was best man for his brother. The ushers were: Howard Starr, brother of the bride; Sidney Sherman, Marty Starr, Jack Cohen, Howard J. Shafter, Charles Winter, Theodore Oberfield, and Ronald Goldman. Standards of white roses, and chrysanthemums decorated the setting of the wedding. Mrs. Starr, mother of the bride, wore a gown of shocking-pink satin embroidered with matching beads and crystal drops; and a pill-box to match. Mrs. Katz, the groom's mother, was in a pink, brocaded gown, embroidered with crystal beads; with a pill-box hat of that shade. Each had corsage of pink orchids. Mrs. A. Sherman, grandmother of the bride, wore a pink, satin gown with embroidered and beaded top; also a matching, draped hat. Mrs. S. WHOM WE REMEMBER

BY RABBI MORRISON B. BIAL, OF TEMPLE SINAI, IN SUMMIT, NEW JERSEY

The Temple lights were just flashing on when he drew his car into the alley and slid it into the spot reserved for him. As he switched off the car lights and motor, he could detect the faint rumblings of the organ through the Friday night stillness. Rabbi Taub felt, as he always did, the mingled delight and apprehension of a Sabbath eve.

His sermon prepared, confident in his cantor and organist, the word apprehension seemed strong for whatever slight worries might sit on the spare shoulders of the still youthful rabbi. Yet there was always a strong awareness that each service was unique, each was the most important of the year, a reaching out on the part of every worshipper present, and that he, the rabbi, was the grasp.

In a few moments the order of service was mentally gone over, the Bible's velvet marker inserted, the brief list of names for the Kaddish and the various announcements checked. Suddenly, the figure at the organ turned and sent a crisp "Good Shabos, how are you?" resounding through the empty edifice. It was the cantor, always early, always eager to go over his music. Down from his heights came the rabbi and together they went over the musical service.

The caretaker, a lank, morose Scot in his sixties, marched down the center aisle to stand under the lectern. "Good Shabos," he offered in his burr, "Mrs. May phoned that she couldn't come, so I fixed the flowers myself." Mrs. May came early at every service to arrange the flowers. If she was absent, she might be ill. The rabbi pulled out his ever-present note-book and jotted down her name. He must be sure to phone her on the morrow.

He returned to his study as the phone rang. A very apologetic voice asked him to add a name to the Yahrzeit list. He hurried back to the pulpit to write it down lest he forget. Once he had forgotten; may it never happen again! A few early worshippers were already in their seats. The organ was pulsing rhythmically as the organist drew Bach's throbbing chords through the quiet air.

The large clock read 8:16. Just fourteen more minutes! He strolled back to his study.

As he began to put on his robe, there was a timid knock at the door. "Come in," he said, hoping that it would take but a moment. The door opened gradually. There stood little Jonathan Krager, ten, and his sister, Jill, seven. The children were obviously frightened, but determined in their intrusion. Slowly they moved into the room.

"Yes, Jonathan, what can I do for you?"

"Mother told us not to come," began Jonathan.

"But you've got to," said Jill.

"I've got to what?" asked the rabbi.

"It's our dog, Judd," resumed Jonathan.

"A car," continued Jill, and the rabbi could see what happened.

"Come in and sit down," he said. His watch said 8:23.

"He ran across the street," said Jill. "He was happy and he didn't look. He was only a puppy."

"And the truck came down fast. . . . The man tried to slow down, but it was getting dark, and I guess he couldn't see too well. Judd was all black."

Both faces were contorted with grief. The rabbi put a hand on each child's shoulder. "Is he?"

"Yes," said Jonathan. "We rushed to the vet, but he couldn't do anything."

"I'm so sorry," said the rabbi. "He was such a nice little dog."

"Rabbi, won't you please say Kaddish for Judd? He was just like a person and he had a soul and we loved him very much."

A rush of confused thoughts flooded the rabbi's mind. The children were heart-broken. He hated to say no to them. Yet how could he pronounce the name of a dog, even a beloved dog, as part of the sanctification of God's name? The Hebrew expression tsaar baalei chayim, the traditional Jewish care for every living creature, sprang to his mind.

He remembered the collie he loved when he was a child, a huge tawny creature with the mien and manners of an aristocrat. When Angus was old they had to put him away. "For his own sake," his mother had explained. How he had hated her and himself and the whole idea of death! He had flown at her with his fists and hard-kicking feet until his father had bundled him away. It was years before he got over Angus' death. Or had he ever gotten over it?

It had been his first real contact with mortality, with the irrevocable, with death. Sitting there in his study, the two children waiting before him, their upturned faces wet with tears and apprehension, he could still see Angus' slow shape, feel the passion that had rendered him then.

Slowly he explained to the children how deep the Jewish feeling for life and all living things is. "A dog or a cat, too, has its role, and an important one. God has given them also, the spark of life and of spirit. Every life comes from God; they are all dear to Him."

"Even a dog?" asked Jonathan.

"Yes, even a dog or a cat."

Jill burst out, "But if he's a good God, why did He let Judd die? Couldn't he have made him run faster or something?"

"God didn't take your dog from you. It was Judd's being so young and careless that made him dash in front of the truck." Angus had been old, but the pain hadn't been any the less. "God didn't want him to die any more than you did. We can't expect a miracle every time we make a mistake. Just as He cared for Judd when he was a happy little dog, so He cares for him right now. He will not forget Judd any more than you will. That is why God is God. Every child or man or dog, everything we love, is loved by Him. Our love is part of His love."

It gives wide, city-to-city coverage for your advertising message, to a high-ranking consumer audience. Received every Friday in the mail, it is read by the family groups which gather together for the Sabbath observance on Friday nights. Every issue is a guide to planning and purchasing, in able-to-buy homes. Sold by subscription only, the Canadian Jewish Review reaches a select market weekly, families who are receptive to the best in goods and services.

• The Canadian Jewish Review fills a definite need as a link between the individual family and the whole Jewish world at large. It is informative about the trends in Jewish thought and social welfare in their changing times; the important Jewish world news; and reports on the organizational life of all ages in the Jewish group, and all interests in the family, particularly business and professional executives, homemakers and young people.

• The Canadian Jewish Review carries more Resort in Florida Resort advertising during the winter season, than any other publication in Canada, daily or weekly; specialized or general; and more single resort advertising accounts than any publication except the New York Times. No account is a centre account. Advertising of the airlines and steamship lines serving this great resort area appears regularly as well as year-round advertising of airlines and steamship lines serving Europeans and Israeli ports and air terminals.

U. S. TECHNICAL AID TO ISRAEL

It was carried out in cooperation with the United Nation's Children's Fund, which provided money for pasteurization and sterilization plants. United States experts taught dairy technology there and worked with Israeli dairy men to develop efficient, modern, hygienic bottling plants.

American technical aid to Israel has ranged from home economics to river diversion. Hence, Mr. McDaniel said, it has contributed to almost every phase of what he called Israel's amazingly rapid development.

THE STAR OF DAVID IN AUSTRALIA, AND THE CHRISTMAS TREE

and others, usually at the insistence of their children, have returned to Israel.

But whatever their exact number, they form a significant element in a Jewish community that numbers about 70,000. Moreover, a large percentage of other Australian Jews came originally from Palestine. But the ex-Palestineans differ from the ex-Israelis in that the former are active in the Jewish community while the latter, and particularly the Sabras, have little or nothing to do with it.

The staying power of Australian Jewry has yet to be put to the test. The constantly increasing number of children in Jewish day schools (now some 40 per cent of those of school age in Melbourne) guarantees a higher level of Jewish knowledge, though not of Jewish commitments.

It has yet to be seen whether the graduates of these schools will maintain the present intense level of Jewish life when they take over from their parents or whether they will revert to the earlier Australian Jewish pattern. The Jews remain, after all, a very small minority in a country where the social barriers that hinder assimilation elsewhere are very weak indeed.

A portent of future developments was perhaps given by a well-known Jewish businessman, who a few years ago had an enormous Christmas tree set up outside his establishment and crowned it with an illuminated Star of David.

Her headdress was a cabbage rose of matching lace and faille leaves, topping her long, pink, tulle illusion veil. Her flowers were a cascade of pink orchids, and stephanotis with flying streamers. The matron of honour was Mrs. Mony Adams, of Ottawa, Ont., cousin of the groom. She wore a long, coral-pink, satin gown; with lace appliqued on the bell-shaped skirt. Her headpiece was a matching wreath of leaves; and she carried a bouquet in graduated shades of pink roses and carnations. The bridesmaids were: Mesdames Andrew Levine, and Samuel Nisenbolm; and Miss Barbara Binder; all cousins of the groom. Each wore a long, coral-pink satin gown, with bell-shaped skirt appliqued with lace; and pink wreaths; and carried pink roses and carnations. The best man was Michael Alan Levine, brother of the groom. The ushers were: Andrew Levine, Mony Adams, Samuel Nisenboim, Ronald Kaplansky, Joel Kaplansky, Alan Lewis, and Harold Minden. Murray Alter and his orchestra played the wedding music. At a dinner and reception in the Ballroom of the Royal York Hotel, two hundred and thirty guests were received. Mrs. Levine, the groom's mother, wore a pale pink, peau de soie gown, with jewelled lace bodice; and long, bell-shaped, skirt; with a matching hat; and carried a pink orchid with her evening purse. Mrs. Toby Rotenberg, 970 Eglinton Avenue West, grandmother of the groom, wore a baby blue lace gown; blue hat; and pale, mauve orchid corsage. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Andrew Levine spent their wedding trip in the Barbados, W.I. The bride travelled in a brown, wool, sheath dress; with matching stole; white coat with leopard collar; and leopard beret. They will reside at 680 Roselawn Avenue. Here for the marriage were: Mr. and Mrs. M. Levine, of Montreal, Que.

WHOM WE REMEMBER

Gradually the pain left the troubled eyes of the children even as they realized that Judd's name would not be mentioned at the service. "When we say the Kaddish, you will be thinking of Judd and so will I. He will always be your gay little dog who wagged his tail because he was so happy to be with you."

There was a rapid knock at the door. It opened and the president of the congregation stood there. "It's 8:40; is anything wrong?"

"No, no, it's all right. Isn't it, children?" The little girl bobbed a curtsey as the rabbi and cantor, bulking large in their robes, moved out to begin the service.

What "Freedom For All" Means

BY BORE SCHARY, PLAYWRIGHT AND PRODUCER; ALSO BONDSMAN VICE-CHAIRMAN OF THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

We are all living dangerously. We eat lovely dinners that very likely have too high a cholesterol count. Most of us are smoking too much. We travel by plane, car or train. We read that fats can bring on hardening of the arteries, smoking can give us lung cancer, irregular exercise may bring on coronaries and planes may fall, cars may crash, and trains may go off rails.

We live in a fantastic world—a world that has become homogenized, pressurized, pasteurized, emulsified, and simonized. We live in a world in which the mind of man has reached outer space, is beginning to probe the very centre of our planet, and has developed panaceas and wondrous nostrums for creature comforts. The mind of man has also created the means of destroying himself completely with a few dozen well-placed hydrogen bombs.

In this angry, tense, difficult, and dangerous time when intransigent men play a reckless game with God's world, we need affirmation.

At a time when morbid statisticians compile probable mortality rates for a possible nuclear war, we must seek each other out to say we have a better future than that.

As we ply our way in a society riddled with corruptive forces that weaken our moral structure, we must seek each other out to say we are better than that.

While our screens and our books and our television sets and some of our plays hurl sex and sadism and sensationalism and shock us with their ugly profusion, we must seek each other out to say that our hearts want something better than that.

We need affirmation. We need to stand for something. We need to prove that the cynic is wrong when he says we are doomed to root in the mire. We need to talk straight with the realization that we mean something to each other.

We cannot speak freely of Russian hypocrisy before we eliminate every last vestige of second-class citizenship in our own country. We cannot support the work of the Anti-Defamation League and at the same time speak in hostile terms of other minority groups who live in our midst. We cannot guide our children along the proper roads unless we are prepared to stride those roads with them, not as explorers but as seasoned travellers.

We cannot complain piously of immorality unless we set extremely high moral standards for ourselves. And I am not thinking of puritanical strictures. I am speaking of basic morality that will lead us toward empathizing with the man opposite us. It is possible to hate an idea without hating the man who expressed it.

In a world rapidly developing long periods of leisure for all of us, it would be good to know that some of that time is spent in doing something worthwhile for our fellow man. To me, leisure is much like faith—it involves taking a burden along with a blessing. We are at a point of our development where the forty-hour week is not only a reality—it appears to be archaic; in some areas we are not only talking about a thirty-hour week, but of a twenty-four hour week. What, then, does man do with all those other hours that are left to him?

It appears, if the present trend is significant, that he sits in front of his television set bemoaning the quality of the programs he persists in viewing; he takes up bowling, boating, hunting, tennis, golf and baseball. He drinks more; he smokes more; he travels more—and energetically and rather frantically, he pursues what is called "the good life." With help from medical science, this "good life" is also a much longer life. Up to now in the Twentieth Century, we have all been given a gift of an additional twenty-five years.

What will this free time impel us to do? Will there be an extravagance of indulgence; will our added hours result in a proliferation of more cynicism, vulgarity, hedonism and selfishness—or will we use that time more fruitfully?

I am all for occupying our leisure time with music and reading and writing, painting, exercising, playing, loving, praying—but all this is not enough. Unless we learn (and we certainly have the time to spend learning) to understand the rest of the humans who live in this world—the jig is up.

Some years ago, I watched Ben Hogan give a golf lesson to some young players. He spoke to them of muscle memory. He was making the point that if you kept trying and practicing the right swing of a golf club, you would never lose the arc of that swing—that the memory of your muscles would in time perfect what it is you were trying to learn.

I think this muscle memory can operate in our behaviour toward people. A good part of our leisure time could be spent profitably in developing a muscle memory of behaviour; in cultivating an instinctive attitude toward our fellow man that is based on what is positive rather than negative. I think it is the most important thing we can do with our leisure time because if we do not find a peaceful path to each other's portal, there will no portals, no paths, no people . . . and no leisure.

I have referred to our dangerous ways of living. We take our risks for granted—hoping that percentages are working for us. There are other risks with which we live. The free society that exists in America has certain risks, but if we eliminate those risks we eliminate our freedoms. Freedom of thought and expression means just that, not fifty-one per cent of freedom, or ninety-nine per cent — it means one hundred per cent freedom. It means freedom for Mr. Welch and for Gerald L. K. Smith. It means freedom for every crackpot or any member of any lunatic fringe organization to have his say.

If we prevent them from being heard, we can be limiting the freedom of our wise, our just, our enlightened voices. Freedom means we can talk back. We can counter each lie with the truth. We can challenge, expose, debate, censure, castigate and oppose the charlatan, the faker, the rabble rouser.

As bigots strive to strike the names of Ralph Bunche and Albert Einstein from textbooks, so we must strive to keep those names in. As the United Nations is branded as a "socialistic" assembly, we must make the name glitter as a parliament of man that is our best hope in this troubled world. As weird unsubstantial critics try to push the books by Eugene O'Neill, Hemingway, Faulkner, Sinclair Lewis, and histories by Charles Beard, Henry Commager, and Bernard DeVoto off the shelves of libraries—we must push to keep those books on the shelves, where they belong.

As the peddlers of false fears create ghosts, we must light the dark corners and prove that it is ectoplasmic nonsense. We must challenge ill-conceived fears. We must bring reason into the arena of public discussion. We must use the leisure time, of which we have so much, to enlist in the fight against prejudice and hate and the spreading of lies.

We must also remember that a man is not an island. We stand for our own rights by standing for the rights of all men. Any man kept off a bus or out of a restaurant keeps us out. When a Catholic is slandered by bigotry we are slandered too. But while we fight for the rights of all men, it is good for all men to retain their special individuality and background.

The American population is formed by hyphens: Jewish-American, Irish-American, Italian-American, German-American, Polish-American. This does not dismay me. I believe that if the hyphens drop away we are liable to remain with a bland, standardized American. I believe that the descendents of our hyphenated ancestors should cherish the diversity of our national background.

As a Jew, I advocate that Jewish-Americans continue their identification, their traditions. I am disquieted at antiseptic religious services, Bar Mitzvahs presided over by professionals who are hired to make the event an entertainment, black tie Seders. Judaism is a unique faith because it is essentially an abstract and intellectual and ethical faith that requires will and discipline and celebration. But it cannot exist unless it is taught.

I believe that the concept of active and devoted monotheism, which is the Jewish contribution to the faith of man, can stay alive only if the Jew helps keep it alive. He can do that only by working at it. I believe that every home, every nation, is better protected by a faith that is nourished and cultured and protected. And our homes, our nation, our world, need protection.

In the Jewish life I knew as a young boy, there was a trinity to whom we appealed in times of trouble. A small accident would evoke Mommenyu, a large mishap would bring forth Tottenyu, and a shock would provoke Gottenyu. A disaster would cause a recitation of all three.

In the fantastic world in which we live, in the dangerous world in which we live, we have made such great strides that we wonder what to do with our leisure. Some observers suggest that our future leisure time may be spent in bomb shelters where we will be able to listen, via radio, to the details of the extermination of two-thirds of the world's population.

It is a leisure occupation in which I choose not to participate. Perhaps none of us will have to participate if we use the leisure time we have now in developing man's relationship to man. We are our brother's keeper. We mean something to each other.

We must maintain our individual identification and the individual identifications of all men. If we should ever lose our devotion, if we should ever cease the struggles against the problems that beset us — Mommenyu, Tottenyu, Gottenyu.

The Star Of David In Australia, And The Christmas Tree

BY ROCHELLE MYERS

Mr. Goldstein, a middle-aged clothing manufacturer whose parents brought him to Australia from Palestine half a century ago, was very unhappy at his daughter's recent wedding. Although he had almost bankrupted himself to make the event a memorable one, the simcha had been spoiled for him. The priest had refused to marry his daughter, a Catholic like her mother, in front of the altar because the bridegroom was a Protestant — and the wedding consequently had to take place in the dingy vestry room.

When Sam (then Shmuel) Goldstein arrived in Australia with his parents and three brothers there were very few other Jewish children with whom to play. He grew up in close contact with Gentiles, and it was only natural that he, like his brothers, should marry a non-Jewish girl. As a matter of fact, fully a third of the Australian Jews entering marriage in the early 20's "married out." These intermarriages, and the ones which preceded them, have removed most of the early Jewish families from the ranks of the community and resulted in such anomalies as a Melbourne mayor whose name is Nathan, but whose family is Protestant, and a Sydney Catholic politician by the name of Cohen.

Today the situation is different, just as the contemporary Jewish community is different from the one that existed before World War II. Over half the Jews now living in Australia arrived in their new homeland within the last seventeen years. Indeed, it is unusual to meet a middle-aged Jew who speaks English without a touch of foreign accent. The newcomers, together with a certain percentage of the earlier settlers, have been responsible for the foundation of many new synagogues, the opening of several first-rate Jewish day schools, and the establishment or strengthening of numerous Jewish organizations. The influence of the recent immigrants, as well as of the Hitler Holocaust, and of the establishment of Israel, has brought an increase in Jewish consciousness and a decline in intermarriage.

Generalizations about Australian Jewish life must, however, be qualified. The two main centers, Melbourne and Sydney, are quite different from one another. Melbourne, where the influence of Eastern European Jews predominates, boasts a much more vigorous Jewish community. In Sydney, where English, German, and Hungarian Jews set the tone, the Jewish renascence is less marked. But both cities share in its efforts. The smaller Jewish communities find the going more difficult. In far-off Hobart, Tasmania, which contains only two dozen Jewish families, services at the local synagogue are sparsely attended when horse races are taking place: the pillars of the congregation, it turns out, are bookies (men who take bets).

One of the most interesting of the smaller Jewish communities is to be found in Canberra, the capital of Australia. A Jewish congregation was organized there some years ago and the cornerstone for its first synagogue was laid recently. The formation of this congregation throws light on another factor that has contributed to the resurgence of Jewish life in Australia, as it has in America.

Very few of the young Jewish couples who came to work in Canberra had any intention of joining a congregation on their arrival. But they discovered that their colleagues in the various government departments expected them to belong to the Jewish "church" just as others belonged to Protestant or Catholic churches. Thus the potent force of middle-class respectability brought these Jews willy-nilly back to the fold.

The unpaid leader of the congregation, a rabbi who teaches philosophy at the local university and who once lived in Israel, realizes that his congregants still have a long way to go before they acquire a genuine interest in, and knowledge of, Judaism. When he greets them at the end of the Sabbath services with "Shabbat Shalom," they answer (because they do not know what he is saying), "Same to you."

A small minority of Jews is not willing to accede to the demands of middle-class respectability. They claim that group identification is of no importance and they seek their friends and often their marriage partners outside the Jewish community. For instance, a European-born Jewish girl who married an Asian student told me that she was not concerned by the problems her children would face as to their racial and religious identity. In the world of tomorrow, she declared, these questions would lose their significance and hers would be "the planned children of the future." But hers is definitely a minority opinion.

Synagogues, both Orthodox and Reform, are the focal point of Jewish life. Ever more luxurious edifices are being erected by the various congregations and new synagogues are planned for the wealthier districts where the Jews are now moving. The Orthodox-Reform split is much more pronounced than in the United States, with many Orthodox rabbis refusing to have anything to do with their Reform colleagues. However, this has not slowed the growth of the Reform movement.

Israel is supported by all religious and secular bodies (except for the surprisingly strong anti-Zionist Bund), though not many years have passed since Zionism was severely attacked by the former Governor General, Sir Isaac Isaacs, and other members of the established Jewish community. This support for Israel is not expressed by membership in Zionist bodies, which have failed, as elsewhere, to attract the younger generation.

They have, at least in theory, a more positive attitude towards settlement in Israel than any other Diaspora Zionist groups. But most of their members would be shocked if their own children were to depart for the Holy Land. One prominent Zionist leader told the non-Zionist parents of a young person who had settled in Israel: "I'm smarter than you are. I didn't let my daughter stay in Israel."

On the other hand, many Israelis have emigrated to Australia. One runs into them everywhere in the Jewish residential areas. In one section of Caulfield, the center of Melbourne's gilded ghetto, the candy store, beauty parlor, magazine stand, and garage are all run by Israelis. Official government statistics show that over 8,000 Israelis have settled in the country. However, it is difficult to ascertain their exact number as some have come on European passports
